Testimonials from Past Tours

Combining a passion for travel and the dairy industry, Ken Natzke arranges trips for dairymen to see what farming is like in other parts of the country and world.

"I'm 83 years old. This is something I can do, and I have a little knowledge about putting a trip together."

Lately, he's been taking an annual trip to California in conjunction with the World Ag Expo at Tulare held each February. This is my 12th trip to California. "There are many interesting things to see in agriculture," Natzke says.

Dave Morris agrees. He has traveled to California and Michigan with Natzke. "Dairy is definitely global. There are many different ways to care for, house and milk cows. Some people get buried in their own situation; but when you see other people's problems, successes and opportunities, it can be uplifting for yourself."

Because the California trip/tour isn't solely focused on dairy, much is learned about growing fruit, vegetables, irrigation and a different way of life. Jeff Mueller, a custom harvester and dairy farm found the trip to be a reasonable vacation. Accommodations were very good. "When you are 'tied up on the farm', you don't get a chance to get away very often. With Natzke's help, there was a chance to visit dairies and see several different aspects of agriculture."

Linda Olson from Pulaski found the variety of agriculture commodities very interesting. "Experiencing the culture and diversifications in California was what I liked best. I was able to see a different way of life."

As a tour guide, I feel the openness and hospitality that is found with Agricultural people is unmatched. Their willingness to share their opportunities and challenges, their failures and successes, and the joy they find in producing our food supply.

Jake & Rita Schot, N.C., enjoyed the awesome week we had together. "Ken definitely showed that he has been around the barn a few times. Keeping things on schedule and having a lot of open doors is what makes traveling fun. Quality of hotels was also very good."

"We still talk about the trip most everyday and were very satisfied with all we saw. We will recommend it to others. Jim and Deanna
